

Announcing the open call for academic writing residencies at The Rockefeller Foundation Bellagio Center on Lake Como.

The Center's residency program offers a superb opportunity for focused work in a serene environment that brings highly diverse cohorts of artists, academics, practitioners, and policymakers together for up to one month, fostering rich cross-cultural and interdisciplinary exchange. Diversity of culture, thought and practice is a hallmark of the program that has for decades provided residents with unparalleled opportunities to advance their work while gaining exposure to new thinking and ideas as they expand their networks internationally.

The latest news and an overview of programs can be found on the Center's website. All applicants must submit an application using the online application form.

“My Bellagio experience has remained with me, influencing my thinking and continually reminding me of the importance of considering the perspectives of others.”

– W. Ed Hammond, Resident Fellow, 2008

Competition Opens: October 1, 2017 • Final Deadline to Submit: December 1, 2017

Successful applicants from this competition will be offered residencies between late 2018 and the first half of 2019.
